CLINIC NEWS

Head lice is a common childhood problem. All schools occasionally have cases of lice, especially after longer vacations/breaks. Transmission occurs most often via head-to-head contact during playdates, sleepovers, lessons and athletic activities. Head lice pose little threat to health and they do not spread any known disease. Head lice DO, however, require time, diligence and expense to eliminate, so prevention is in the best interest of everyone. Limiting the spread of head lice requires team effort!

More information about prevention and treatment of head lice is available here: CISD Head Lice Information or from your physician or pharmacist.
